Gauthier and Co, Nice, 1880. [2], 6, 235, [5] pp. Frontis, C. Mattei. 3 representations of human figures, p. 236 - 237. 8vo. 7-1/8 x 4-5/8 Electro-homoeopathy is a derivative of homeopathy that originated with Count Cesar Mattei of Bologna. The name is derived from a combination of electro (which refers to the electrical bioenergy content supposedly extracted from plants and therapeutic values, not electricity in the conventional sense) and homeopathy (referring to an alternative medical philosophy developed by Samuel Hahnemann in the 18th century). Electro-homeopathy is defined as a combination of electrical devices and homeopathy, however some argue that the therapeutic use of homeopathic preparations of certain electrical bioenergy plants is intended for term. Discipline is considered different from traditional homeopathy, which relies on serially diluted medication substances that cause similar symptoms to those it tries to cure; electro-homeopathy, however, does not directly follow the law of the like. Mattei studied natural science, anatomy, physiology, pathology, chemistry and botany. He ultimately focused on the alleged therapeutic power of 'electricity' in botanical extracts, making bold, ultimately unsupported claims about the efficacy of his treatments, including the claim that his treatments offered a non-surgical alternative to cancer. Not surprisingly, his claims were met with skepticism by established medical authorities. Despite the criticism, including the British medical establishment's challenge to the hard success of cancer treatment, electro-homeopathy (or matteism, as was sometimes known at the time) was accepted and by the beginning of the 20th was the subject of about 100 publications and there were three magazines dedicated to it. After Mattei's death, his work was built by Theodore Krauss (1864 - 1924) which increased the number of treatments available, including the introduction of injectable forms of treatment, and modernized manufacturing processes. [Wiki]. A scant book on the subject: OCLC records 6 ccm worldwide, with only 2 in the US. ABPC does not show copies at auction in the last 30+ years. It's a binding. Textblock - VG+ (occasional pen underline and marginal notes). Modern brown quarter calf tying with marble paper plates. New EPS.
